Build new leads:

PIs can dedicate more time to pursuing new leads, often traveling across state lines or even internationally if needed.

PIs can maintain close communication with the victims' families, ensuring they are informed and involved in every step of the investigation. This personalized approach helps to rebuild trust and hope.

For victims' families, a cold case is an open wound that refuses to heal. The lack of answers and uncertainty of justice can take an emotional toll. Private investigators often step in to fill the void left by law enforcement's limitations.
