Plane Ticket Scams

Everyone looking to travel with their families is looking for the best deal to save money. Numerous ads online or on Facebook Marketplace offer cheap flights. These sellers claim they can get tickets directly from the airline at a lower price and ask you to pay them to book them for you.

A family in Ontario was stuck in the airport after discovering half the tickets they bought were fake. They paid someone on Facebook for the flights, but didn't know until they checked in that he had scammed them. Air Canada tried to refund them for their tickets, but the money went to the card that paid for the tickets, so the scammer received the refund instead.

How to Avoid These Scams

- Use well-known websites like Expedia or Kayak.
- You can also book vacation packages directly from airlines, which are often cheaper.
- Call the hotel or airline a week before departure to confirm that everything is legitimate.
- Beware of clicking online ads. When you look at a vacation spot's ads, you will be pushed towards that
